PRAYERS & INSTRUCTION

ON THE KNOWLEDGE OF SELF

Lord, cast a ray of light on my soul, so that I may be able to see myself as Thou seest me and as Thou judgest me.

To insure an orderly and progressive growth in the spiritual life, we must know ourselves. We must consider our sins, our weak points, our evil tendencies, as well as the progress we have already made, the favorable results we have attained, and our inclinations to good. This knowledge of our interior state is obtained through the examination of conscience — that is a profound knowledge of oneself. The examen considered in this way becomes one of the most important exercises of the spiritual life, since its object is to help the soul to rid itself of everything that might obstruct or delay its journey to God, and to stimulate it to quicken its pace toward Him.

This examination of conscience, we must add, differs from that which one makes before confession, since the latter focuses mostly on the offenses that we will soon ask forgiveness for in the tribunal of Confession.

Just as we cannot wage war with an unknown enemy, or make conquest of an unknown region, in the same way it is impossible to fight the evil in ourselves if we have not previously identified it. We can never attain sanctity if we have not looked for an efficacious means of acquiring it. In other words, the examination of conscience attains its end when the soul who has faithfully practiced this exercise can say to itself, these are the inclinations which I must watch more carefully to avoid falling into sin; these, the weak points which I must strengthen; these are the virtues that I must practice most of all. In this way the soul will be able to formulate practical, firm resolutions which will then become the special subject of its subsequent examinations.

It is clear that we must first recognize and combat any tendencies which could lead us to mortal sin, but then, those that could bring us to venial sin or to simple voluntary imperfections must be similarly treated. Everything that constitutes a deliberate fault must be progressively and energetically rooted ...faults against charity, or patience, or obedience- all, nevertheless, have one and the same cause, one common root which may be, for example, pride or sloth. It is precisely against this root of our sins and imperfections that we must direct our efforts, . . . fight it directly by the increase of the opposite virtue.

out of the soul which aspires to divine union.

Instead of trying to seek out all the faults it has committed, the soul living an interior life — one we assume to be free by now from mortal sin — should fix its attention on the degree to which its faults have been voluntary, even in the case of slight imperfections, because it is these deliberate faults that present the greatest obstacle to spiritual progress and to union with God.

The soul must carefully investigate the cause of and the motive for these failures. It must realize that while its exterior faults are of
